Bridge over the Columbia to Puget Island from Cathlamet

WAHIAKUM COUNTY (wuh-Ki-uh-kuhm), the 3rd smallest county in Washington, was created by the territorial legislature in 1854. The name comes from a Kathlamet Indian village located on the north bank of the Columbia River near the present town of Cathlamet. Chief Wakaiyakam, whose name the village took, is buried in Pioneer Cemetery in Cathlamet. Wahkiakum means "tall timber" in Chinook.

CATHLAMET, county seat of Wahkiakum County, got its name from the Kathlamet Indians, a Chinook tribe. The tribal name comes from the Chinook word "calamet," meaning "stone" and was given to the tribe because they lived along a stretch of rocky river bed. Cathlamet was sighted in 1792 by Lt. W.R. Broughton, while verifying Capt. Robert Gray's reported discovery of the Columbia River. In 1805, the Lewis & Clark Expedition found the Kathlamet and Wahkiakum tribes living here during their Northwest Expedition and they camped at the present day Vista Park in Skamokawa where they traded with the Indians. James Birnie of Hudson Bay Company settled here in 1846 and named the area Birnie's Retreat. The name was later changed to Cathlamet in 1851.

Puget Island, was named in 1792 by Lieutenant Broughton on his exploration of the Columbia River. On October 26, 1792, Broughton sailed passed the island and named it for Lieutenant Peter Puget, the same person Puget Sound, near Seattle, Washington, was named for. This island, which lies across from Cathlamet, Washington, is connected to the mainland by Washington State Highway 409 bridge crossing the Cathlamet Channel. Wahkiakum County, has operated a Puget Island to Westport ferry since 1962. The Ferry is the last ferry in existence on the Lower Columbia River.

Skamokawa. rests on the banks of the Columbia River and on WA 4. The town includes a post office, restaurant, and general store, along with a nearby historical museum and covered bridge. It is a local center for kayaking and fishing. This Washington town is located on the Columbia River at River Mile (RM) 33.5, where Steamboat Slough joins the mouth of the Skamokawa Creek. Skamokawa was founded in 1844. Originally the town was a river community known as "Little Venice", and was visited daily by large stern wheel steamboats running between Portland and Astoria and why many of the homes and businesses were built facing the river. In 1917 that the town was linked by road to the neighboring communities, and in the early 1930s Washington State Highway 4 was finished linking Skamokawa to the rest of the state.
